

Here we have a gratifying and at the same time convincing sight. The assembled Huns are just a part of the prisoners bagged by the Allies in one battle in France. This gives a definite idea of how enormous recent German losses have been.

Copyright, French Pictorial Service.

An example of American power on the battlefield. Heavy field artillery being "oriented" into position, preparatory to opening up.

Copyright, Committee on Public Information.

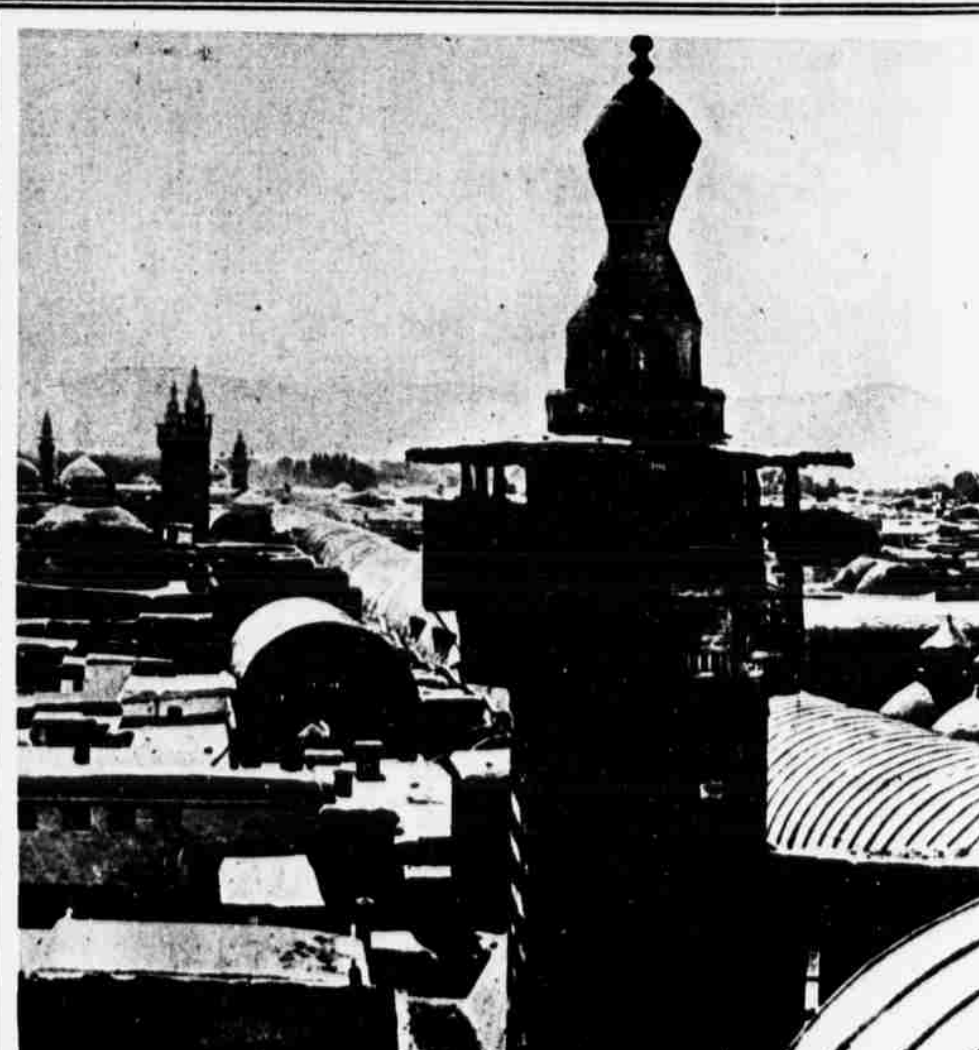

A remarkable demonstration of camouflage. The Maharaja of Patiala visiting a British ammunition dump presents an odd appearance to the camera because of the shadows cast by the camouflaged nets overhead.

British Official Photo. Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

A first aid station at Seicheprey. This was painted by S. J. Woolf, the American artist, from a sketch made on the spot and is now being exhibited in the Liberty Loan campaign. Note the wounded Yank deriving comfort from a cigarette during his wait.

Damascus, recently captured by the British, with the arched roof over the "Street Called Straight" plainly showing. Through this thoroughfare the conquering army marched into the city. © Underwood & Underwood.